Individualized mid-femoral access for antegrade deployment of chronic total occlusions of coronary arteries. To investigate the performance of an individualized mid-femoral access (IFMA) technique for antegrade chronic total occlusion (CTO) device deployment. Twenty consecutive patients with CTO lesions of the left anterior descending artery were included in this prospective study. After successful CT-guided guidewire crossing of the lesion, an Arrow Revalving catheter (Medtronic, Minneapolis, MN, USA) was used to cross the lesion. The IFMA technique was used to perform antegrade CTO device deployment. Complete CTO recanalization was achieved in 17 patients (85%). Of the four patients (20%) in whom CTO recanalization failed, three had an IFMA of the femoral artery and one had a femoral-brachial artery access. During a mean follow-up period of 13.5 ± 2.5 months, only two patients (10%) experienced periprocedural complications (one access site hemorrhage and one late hematoma). This small study demonstrates a promising potential for IFMA as an alternative method for antegrade CTO device deployment in patients with an otherwise inaccessible lesion.
